

The Call to Worship comes at the beginning of Christian worship in many liturgical traditions. It is written in a “call and response” format where the worship leader speaks and those in the congregation respond.

One: Let all the inhabitants of the earth come to worship the Lord

Many: Let us all praise the Lord

One: Let the birds who dwell in the heavens sing praises

Many: Let us all sing to the Lord

One: Let the fish and creatures of the sea feel God’s presence of the depths of the ocean

Many: Let us all feel the presence of the Lord

One: Let the trees whose roots are deep in God’s dirt hold steadfast in the lord

Many: Let us all hold steadfast in the Lord (Ella S.)

By the beautiful light of our holy Savior Jesus Christ the Lord, we all come together to worship and praise his sacred name. We sing joy for all the blessings he has given us. Amen. (Andrew M.)

Leader: Lord, our provider, we are weak in tending for your creation in so many different ways.

People: Let us worship you, and ask for your forgiveness, so that you may lead us in the right direction.

Leader: God, we come from different places and have many sins we have committed.

People: We repent, and gather here at a place where we feel welcomed to pray in order for our sins to be lifted.

Leader: We sometimes forget that you gave us this world, and called us to be your disciples.

People: Let us remember the earth that you have provided us, and let us spread the word. In your name we pray, Amen. (Emily E.)
